Meanwhile for on-campus learning, the best graduate was Khoo Li Zhe, 23, from Bachelor of Business (Honours) in Finance, who was awarded the Tun Dr Lim Keng Yaik Memorial Gold Prize.

Mok is senior correspondent (Penang) for Malay Mail.

On thriving during the pandemic, she responded, "Time management is key to juggling a full-time job, family and studies."

"Family support is also important to keep me going. Without their support, it would not have been easy."

"The most important thing is to always take time out to recoup and refresh so that we are ready to absorb and learn new things."

Se is a senior accountant at Southern Accounting Services, Johor Baru.

Regarding her work and study balance, she said, "I made myself a study schedule as I understand that time management is essential for me to manage my study during busy periods at work."

On her motivation, Se remarked, "When I was young, my parents taught me that education is the way to success."

"When I chose to further my studies in WOU, they gave me their support as they wanted me to get the education they never had."

Mok: The most important thing is to always take time out to recoup and refresh so that we are ready to absorb and learn new things.

Ong currently runs her own digital advertising agency in Penang, helping small business owners to create digital content and manage their digital marketing strategy on social media platforms.

She chose CeMBA due to her interest in starting her own business, since she was employed with a company before that, with little knowledge about business.

Khoo, from Penang, is a proprietary trader at an investment company.

On his success, he said, "A well-planned time management allows me to prioritise my daily work."

"As life does not always go as we plan, it might be difficult to stay focused and get familiar with virtual learning during the pandemic period."

"So, I decided to work harder and do more research on those topics that I did not understand."

Three couples across Malaysia will be graduating together from WOU this year.
